

- In Australia, more than one in four children are sexually abused (ACMS 2023¹). This statistic includes over one in three girls and almost one in five boys.
- The abuse of these children is a public health crisis. We are facing an epidemic.
- Online child sexual exploitation (CSE) is one of the fastest-growing crimes globally, propelled by rapid advancements in technology.
- Perpetrators of child abuse can reach victims quickly through various ways. Any child, anywhere, can now become a potential victim if they or their abuser has access to a digital device.
- Further, the abuse can be recorded and distributed using online technology, causing repeated trauma for victims as the content is shared and reshared potentially millions of times.

Who We Are

ICMEC Australia serves as a crucial advocate and resource in the fight against online CSE. We are boldly confronting this issue when most would rather avoid it. Alongside our coalition of partners, we strive to proactively halt and prevent its occurrence.

As an independent not-for-profit organisation, we collaborate with various stakeholders such as financial services and corporate entities, law enforcement, policymakers, academics, and NGOs, to facilitate collaborative solutions to help enhance their ability to detect, report, prosecute, and prevent CSE.
